

Well, I think writing is putting your ideas, thoughts, and information down on a medium where others can process those ideas and thoughts. With writing you can find information about animals, space, art, agriculture, and pretty much everything else. You can write down your thoughts and ideas about your feelings or facts and make your paper informative. Research is finding more information on a subject/topic so you yourself can be more informed. Reading is taking a look at someones writing for entertainment, research, arguments, and more. Good writing when the author gives you the information you need or when he makes you think. Good writing is also varying the way he makes sentences and having appropriate grammar.